

About the Creator

Frank Agin is not simply an author with a story to tell. He is an accomplished business leader, attorney, entrepreneur, speaker, and nationally recognized relationship-builder who has spent decades helping people create meaningful professional connections and opportunities.

As the founder and president of AmSpirit Business Connections, Frank has built and led a national networking organization centered on trust, relationships, and referrals. Through that work — along with hosting the Networking Rx podcast and speaking to audiences across the country — he has developed a broad network of business leaders, influencers, entrepreneurs, and professionals spanning numerous industries and markets.

A former attorney, CPA, and corporate consultant, Frank brings both creative passion and real-world business sophistication to Coach Dad. He understands leadership, organizational dynamics, marketing, relationship-building, and the long-term work required to create momentum behind a meaningful project.

Coach Dad reflects many of the themes that have shaped Frank's life and career: ambition, sacrifice, mentorship, fatherhood, teamwork, and the often-unexpected ways people influence one another.

While high school football provides the backdrop, the story's emotional core centers on relationships, personal growth, and redemption.

Frank approaches this project not merely as a writer hoping to “get a movie made,” but as a thoughtful collaborator interested in building authentic relationships with people who connect with the story and share a vision for what it can become.

Introduction Bit

I'd like to introduce you to Frank Agin, author of Coach Dad, a compelling father-son story about ambition, sacrifice, and redemption, with high school football serving as the backdrop. Attached is a synopsis. Frank is currently exploring opportunities to adapt the novel into a feature film and is looking to build relationships with producers, directors, and others who connect with the story and share a vision for what it could become.

What makes Frank different is that he brings much more than a manuscript to the table. As the founder and president of a national business networking organization, an attorney, CPA, entrepreneur, speaker, and host of a long-running business podcast, he has spent decades building relationships, creating opportunities, and bringing people together. He intends to leverage that experience, network, and business acumen to help build momentum behind Coach Dad and do everything he can to contribute to the project's success.